Have you ever started something only to find out half way through that it was the wrong thing? That happened to me this past weekend. The “book” (yes, that one...the scandalous one!) was put on the syllabus by the professor by mistake.

I’m almost done reading it and while I could be upset that I’ve “wasted” time reading something that we won’t be discussing in class, I’ve actually learned a whole lot about myself in the journey. Granted, I’m now skimming another book (by the same author, and much more bland) for class discussions, but I’m glad to have spent time digging into some hard material that made me examine who I am and what has shaped me.

Things like that happen in life all the time. Sometimes the examples are big life situations and sometimes it’s when Siri says the dreaded “recalculating” over and over again due to construction.

We can become irritated, mad and ungrateful in those moments, or we can look for ways in which we might be able to learn about ourselves or the world around us. How we respond might just be part of what helps us show Jesus to the world...or not. Choose your response wisely!

Summer Reading Group

We have a book! It is Bastille Day by Greg Garrett. It is hot off the press and a great read. And, what's more, Greg is working to find a date later in the summer when we can all get on Zoom and do an author chat!!!
