I'm not quite back in the saddle, but I am back in town, at least. This past week in Tulsa was wonderful. Class was amazing and insightful and just plain fun. My classmates and colleagues were wise and compassionate and taught me a great deal.

The entire week was about preaching and context and culture. So, I spent a great deal of time thinking about and talking about you all. I got to talk about the history of Nocona and Central Christian. And, I got to talk about you all and what makes us "us." I got to tell how you all inspired what will become my final program project next year and how my understanding of ministry has been shaped by the way you all have done ministry in this space and place.

And now that I'm back, my head and heart are full....and my body is really, really tired. I have a lot on my plate in terms of final class work and getting ramped up for writing my first draft of the thesis proposal and then refining it so it will be passed by the end of the year.

But, for at least a day or two, I'm going to take a couple of naps and just try to process all that is floating around in my head.
